Christina E. Brown MPH '13

Since graduating from Mailman in 2013, I have dedicated the last 10 years of my career to strengthening and maintaining vital public health systems for underserved communities - first at Healthfirst a regional not-for-profit health insurer in New York City which provides high-quality and accessible care for some of the frailest and most vulnerable New Yorkers, and now at Oscar Health, an Obamacare health insurance provider that is on a mission to reinvent health insurance to make a healthier life accessible and affordable for all.

I previously held roles in accounting and finance at PwC and Citigroup and am now a converted accountant turned data nerd and public health enthusiast, passionate about mentoring the next generation of public health leaders, and using data to tell stories, inform strategy, and generate actionable insights to improve health outcomes.

As the school celebrates its Centennial Year, I am excited to play a more active role within the alumni community and help shape the vision and increased impact the Board is planning to make over the next 100 years.
