Sonalee is a Consultant at Trinity Life Sciences, where she provides strategic advisory services and develops research insights to guide the work of innovative firms in the health care sector. She is particularly interested in health economics and outcomes research. Sonalee received her Master of Public Health at Columbia's Mailman School of Public Health in the Department of Health Policy & Management. Prior to graduate school, she worked at several federal agencies, as well as in policy research at the Atlantic Media Company. She is honored and humbled to join the Alumni Board during this momentous centennial year to give back to a school that means so much to her, and believes that to invest in strengthening and maintaining vital public health systems is to invest in the educational institutions that create public health leaders of tomorrow. Sonalee is passionate about occupational safety and health, as well as about researching and advocating for geriatric health services, having co-coordinated a remote geriatric social support and health assessment intervention in Washington Heights with Columbia's COVID-19 Student Service Corps over the past year. Her passion for public service has also led her to serve on the board of the Washington Leadership Program, a nonprofit dedicated to building the next generation of public sector leadership from within the South Asian American community.
